On July 11, 1976, a Cuban-trained CIA team of ex-spooks executed a highly improbable hit at the home of the Russian Consul in Miami, Florida. Plotting not to shoot the Consul's wife, but rather her lover and a recently arrived Cuban Party official, they also shot the lover's girlfriend (who happened to be the love of the Consul's wife's husband). Somehow, all this went wrong, and both lovers survived. Only the assassin of the Consul's wife was hit and killed, while the man who was to be killed was a cabinet member of President Carter. In the first few months of the Carter Administration, the CIA's ex-spooks decided to kill the Cuban ambassador to the US and install instead an openly anti-Castro Cuban. But when the new Ambassador arrived in the US, he was whisked away from Miami and put into isolation. Soon, he was found to have cancer and died. A little more about the author: The author is a US Defense Department intelligence specialist who worked on many major operations, including the Iran-Contra Affair and the murder of the top ranking secret agent.
