"We're out growing the market," said Andrew Klaproth, manager of Safeway's Kitchener location. "The volume that we do... is out at (the) 30th percentile, so we're growing at a very high rate. "We're getting a lot more traffic." Klaproth said Safeway is seeing a higher demand for local, organic products. "We're seeing more shoppers asking for it," he said. "We've never had that before, really." Since opening two years ago, Klaproth said organic food retail is growing faster than other local grocery retailers. "We started at three per cent," he said. "We're now at five per cent, which is pretty big growth." Klaproth said Safeway's new Schenker Farms store is also seeing growth. "It's no secret that we are the first 100 per cent organic grocery store in the city," he said. "It's really been great for us. It's definitely helped us." The Schenker Farms store opened about a year ago and features everything organic, including milk, eggs, beef, fish and flour. "It's the best-of-breed, the best of everything. It's unique, and it's clean," Klaproth said. "It's really well-designed. You can see how many great suppliers we have." A new trend among specialty grocers Co-owner Sheena Oppenheim, who operates Uptown Grocery in Saskatoon, said specialty grocers have been growing in popularity for some time. "This was kind of a year we had kind of a little resurgence of specialty, I would say. I think it
